We are part of a larger organism, in which we're bound together by kinship and shared experiences. But even more so, we're connected by history. By genealogy and history, I mean the stories that mark our past, the events that shaped us and our beliefs. Wherever we came from, we share a common ancestry, our deep past. No matter where we are today or the ways in which our family members are connected to our own family history, we're bound together by the same ties, the same story. It's why we get so angry at a common joke that I've heard and that's repeated every holiday season: 4 thoughts on "The Connections" I always enjoyed your posts. They were interesting and laid out plainly in a way that I found easy to read. I feel as if you're a kindred spirit. And I love the family history stuff. It's amazing to read about your family history. It's been fun to read about my family's history as well. I don't get angry anymore. I just get agitated by bad jokes. Thanks for the comments. I'm glad you enjoy reading them. I tried to write the posts like a novel but without all the extraneous words that can bog things down. Let's face it, no one really cares about a
